Troll and Dragon

By: Maggie Murphy

¹ "You look upset, Mom," Prince Gabriel said.

² "I've received some not-so-good news," said the queen. "A troll has moved into the cave on the western road. He says no one can pass without handing over a gold coin."

³ Gabriel said, "Don't worry. At least the eastern road is still open, and—"

⁴ A messenger ran into the room. "Your Highness, a dragon has moved into the cave on the eastern road! He says that no one can pass without handing over a gold coin."

⁵ "Oh no," said Gabriel. Their small kingdom was ringed by high mountains. The western and eastern roads were the only routes in and out.

⁶ "We don't have enough knights to drive away trolls and dragons," the queen said glumly "What shall I do?"

⁷ Gabriel thought awhile. Then he said, "Leave this to me."

⁸ Soon after, Gabriel rode his horse to the troll's cave. As he drew close, the troll stomped out and unknotted a huge sack stuffed with gold.

⁹ "Turn back, Prince," said the troll, "or toss in a gold piece."

¹⁰ "Your gold is exactly what I've come to talk about, Troll," said Gabriel. "The dragon that just landed on the eastern road can't wait to get his claws on treasure. I'm sure it won't be long before you two go into battle. I'm begging you to fight in the mountains, so you won't destroy my city."

¹¹ The troll looked worried. "Is this dragon big?"

¹² "He's the biggest dragon who's ever invaded my kingdom," said Gabriel. Which is true, he thought, since he's the only dragon who's ever invaded my kingdom.

¹⁴ "I'll let him know," said Gabriel politely. Then he turned his horse and trotted to the eastern road.

¹⁵ When the dragon heard hoofbeats, he slithered from his cave and pointed to an enormous chest filled with gold. "Hand over your fee, young Prince," he hissed, "or I won't allow you to journey onward."

¹⁶ "I'm not trying to ride on," Gabriel said. "I'm delivering an important message from the troll."

¹⁷ "Troll? What troll?"

¹⁸ "The troll who lives on the western road. I'm surprised you haven't heard of him, Dragon. He's the biggest troll in my kingdom, and he loves treasure as much as you do. He said to tell you he'd fight with you this afternoon for your gold."

¹⁹ The dragon paused, then said, "I've suddenly remembered that my dear aunt Roastina has invited me to her volcano for lunch. No one makes better lava pudding than she does. I'll be back to barbecue the troll later on." And he snatched up his treasure chest and flew away.

²⁰ That's that, thought Gabriel, grinning. Now for my own lunch. No one makes better chocolate pudding than the palace cook does!
